1. Consideration and discussion should occur regarding the "Broker/Salesperson Contract", as many of these issues may be addressed in that agreement.

2. BE ADVISED, BE PREPARED: When starting a new business, financial stability, the ability to pay your normal living expenses from non-commission income, should be considered absolutely essential for any realistic chance of surviving in the real estate business. Your commission income is not predictable in its amount or in its frequency when you are a new sales licensee. AND you must anticipate and plan to pay business expenses even before you begin to generate commission income.

It is recommended that a minimum of six months worth of living expenses should be available as well as an additional minimum of $1,500 for business expenses prior to engaging in the practice of real estate. It is highly recommended that you put together, as part of a complete Business Plan, specific anticipated expenses, sources of business, projected income, as well as prospecting and marketing strategies.

Failure to heed this advice may result in prematurely ending what could have been a successful real estate sales career. Plan your work and then work your plan.
